

This paper describes a novel method of blood vessel extraction from the 3D CTA data of lower limbs. According to possible patient movement during the CT helical acquisition, we propose a novel automated approach of CTA subtraction, which is based on combination of rigid and flexible volume registration.