

We report comparison of three numerical representations of DNA sequences applied on mitochondrial COI genes of nine bird species for similarity/dissimilarity analysis based on distance matrix method. Mitochondrial COI genes are used for DNA barcoding that means quick species identification of unknown sample. Another intent of DNA barcoding is identification of new and close related species. Numerical representation of DNA sequences is appropriate step before computational processing of the sequences.