

This paper describes a new method for finger veins detection. The method is split into four parts. The first of them consists of basic series of image filters enhancing the vein pattern itself and the other three are sequences of image filters determining the finger contour used for the background masking. The tests were done with a first prototype and their experimental results show a great potential of the proposed method.