

The paper presents blind multichannel deconvolution for estimation of the arterial input function in dynamic contrast-enhanced magnetic resonance imaging (DCE-MRI). It enables perfusion imaging in experiments where the arterial input function is not measurable. Fairly good fit was achieved for tests on synthetic and clinical data.