

Matching a wavelet to class of signals can improve the feature extraction stage in classifiers based on time-frequency signal decomposition as well as can increase the signal to noise ratio during de-noising process. In signal detection applications, the decomposition of a signal in the presence of noise using a wavelet matched to the signal would produce a sharper and more discriminating peak in time-scale space as compared to standard non-matched wavelets.